Climate change will have any effect on economic development?

A Stanford University study found that if global warming trends do not change, 85 years later, in 2100, global economic losses significantly, 77 percent of the country will be more poverty.

October 22 morning, the paper published online in top international academic journals "Nature" (Nature), the paper titled "Nonlinear temperature impact on the global economic productivity" (Global non-linear effect of temperature on economic production). "Natural" for the article allot a special comment.

20th, corresponding author of the paper, assistant professor of Earth System Science Department at Stanford University Marshall Burke (Marshall Burke) told surging News (www.thepaper.cn), if measures are taken to mitigate climate warming, China will benefit. Because the study showed that if left unchecked, global warming, when in 2100, China's per capita GDP compared with no climate change, fell by more than a quarter. While at the same time, the decline in global per capita GDP was 23%.

Marshall and his collaborators analyzed the 1960 --2010, the economic data of these 40 years, 166 countries. They found that the impact of temperature on economic productivity is nonlinear, where the annual average temperature 13 °C is a cut-off point. Within a range of less than 13 °C, the temperature rise, increased economic productivity. When the annual average temperature reaches 13 °C, economic productivity peaked more than 13 °C, if the annual average temperature rise, economic productivity is decreased.

The researchers said the experimental data combined with the global weather models to study the effects of climate warming on the future of the economy.

Professor of Environmental Economics, University of Gothenburg, Sweden Manchester Neil Thomas (Thomas Sterner) in the publication "Nature," the commentary said, droughts and heat caused by disease, which is the impact we have already received over climate change. But Marshall et al study shows that the loss caused by climate change far beyond our previous knowledge . We have only just begun to realize the loss of climate change can be caused by
